CLEVELAND, March 29, 1859. EDITOR LEADES :- In your paper of this morning, in looking at the "Record of Deaths" I find among a long list of distinguished personages who have died within a very brief period, the name of Bryce J. Bartlett, Esq., "a distinguished lawyer of Fremont." Mr. Bartlett was one of the pioneers of Northwestern Ohio. He assisted in the survey of that portion of the State comprising now Crawford, Seneca and adjoining counties, subsequently took up the cabinet making business; afterwards that of a watchmaker; was at one time engaged in mercantile affairs in a small way; and during these several engagements, and after he arrived at majority, (at which period of he had never learned to read or write,) he not only studied with the most unremitting assiduity and energy, but observed so correct a system and such thorough self-discipline, that he laid the foundation of a correct, steady development, and a free and expansive unfolding of an intellect, naturally strong, and peculiarly clear and active. He studied the profession of law without interference with his regular employ ments, and when he came to the Bar of Sandusky county, and became a competitor of such men as Buckland, John L. Green, Cooper K. Watson, Spink, Lane, Root, Beecher, and others of the best legal gentlemen of the Northwestern portion of the State, he was at once formidable as an adversary, whether affirmatively enforcing a cause, or assisting the demands of others. He never ceased to labor .-His client's cause became his own from the date of his retainer, and he evinced a zeal and faithfulness in the pursuit of their supposed rights, amounting almost to the sublimity of Clear, shrewd, logical and impressive in the enforcement of his legal opinions; forcible, plausible and effective in general argument, quick and keen in his conception of the necessities of causes, seizing them as they arose and turning them to good account, or meeting their effect by the most perfect intellectual countering, he was, of course, a successful advocate and a he was, of course, a successful advocate and a powerful defender. He will be remembered long by the people of Northwestern Ohio for his many intellectual and professional endowments; he will long be remembered by the young of the profession as the self made lawyer, who, rising alone and becoming the conquerer of such o> stacles to his advancement as want of early education, poverty, and the kindred besetm which surrounded his early life, placed himself securely on the intellectual, educational and pro-lessional level with the more fortunate with der that the voice of the majority might be efficient in the selection of a good City Ticket, nothing more. Other important offices beside the Mayoratty are to be filled, and a proper selection for all is what the Leader desired and advocates.
